After the death of Mary Ann Manning the matter was again brought before the court by motion.

20th November, 1820.—Kilty, Chancellor.—Ordered, that John H. Manning be, and he is hereby appointed co-trustee, in the place of Mary Ann Manning deceased, with Ignatius Manning; the two to give bond as before directed, and the former orders to remain in force.

These trustees gave a joint bond accordingly. And on the 9th of July, 1824, James Boarman, by his petition stated, that the estate of the lunatic was very productive, and more than sufficient to support him in every comfort and luxury; but that the trustees had treated him with great unkindness, although he was very mild and inoffensive in his conduct; and they had kept him in an outhouse, which was not sufficient to protect him from the weather; and with not enough clothing, even of the coarsest kind, to shield him from the weather, not even enough to cover his body and conceal his nakedness; that the petitioner is one of the next of kin of the lunatic, in the same degree as the trustees. James Boarman by his petition, on oath, filed on the 11th of April, 1826, stated, that the trustee John H. Manning was dead; that the other trustee, Ignatius Manning, since the return of the last process had removed out of the state; and that the estate of the lunatic laid immediately in his vicinity. Whereupon he prayed, that he might be appointed trustee, &c.

11th April, 1826.—BLAND, Chancellor.—On considering the petition of James Boarman, filed this day; and it appearing by the return of the sheriff on the subpænas issued in pursuance of the
